ConflictPro is a centre for continuing professional development in the field of conflict management. Those who work in law enforcement and intelligence environments are continually striving to keep ahead of the criminal fraternity, in terms of technology and thinking. ConflictPro has been established to help security and law enforcement professionals maintain current knowledge, raise their game to meet the increasing demands of the job, and equally as important in today's litigious society, maintain an auditable record of doing so. We provides a free research, resources and up to date national and international news. There are cutting edge master classes delivered by true sector experts, also development workshop in a large range of subjects relevant to security professionals. We believe learning is key to developing and using new skills to improve performance and to work smarter. Central to ConflictPro's subscriber service is an innovative, on line personal development portfolio. This learning tool has been specifically designed to take the headache out of continuing professional development, it gives structure to learning and helps individuals record and evidence their progress. ConflictPro has built strong relationships with many of the security industry's leading organisations and experts. This puts the organisation in a unique and extremely valuable position, offering resources that can be used to share best practice across all sectors. One of the organisations at the cutting edge of supplying information and creating education programs for the security sector is PS5 and ConflictPro share many of their concerns and have a similar approach to continuing professional development. This makes PS5 a natural source of information and expertise for us to use for direction on topical issues and the latest thinking. Steve Collins PS5's CEO will be a speaker at the 2007 ConflictPro annual conference, and we look forwards to building a powerful working relationship with his company.
